I recently read friend and fellow writer Bob Moriarty’s new book, “Nobody Knows Anything”. It’s a short read on investing in metals and junior resource stocks and occupied a couple of hours on a weekday afternoon.

I’ve known Bob for about 10 years; we’ve spent many days in the field on project evaluations in a variety of countries. We often think alike but have also aired significant differences over drinks at the bar when the day is over. One of the things I like about Bob is it’s always black or white; there are no shades of gray in his world.

This little book has a great cover and that alone is worth the price of admission. Bob is a wordsmith and as always, his work is filled with acerbic wit, humor, and a healthy dose of cynicism. The book is very much geared toward the lay investor and contains lots of common sense info and ideas for successful speculating. It’s essentially 14 essays that could have been individual posts on his website, 321Gold.com. I found it a bit pedantic at times, but realize that I’m a professional speculator.

Here’s the link on Amazon; buy this book for the price of a beer in an upscale Vancouver, Toronto, or New York bar and become a better investor.

Ciao for now,
